celled, and President Cleveland then named him as minister to Austria-Hungary, but here, too, through the Italian royal influence, his appointment was declared uncongenial to that government, owing to his well known views, which were regarded as hostile to a friendly government. The United States government is sisted, and Secretary Bayard finally declared that the appointment would stand, even if a rupture in diplomatic relations between Austria and this country resulted. The statement that he was unacceptable to the Italian government for the reason that his wife was of another faith is denied. At this juncture, when the appointment seemed likely to bring about international complications and a strain of relations with Austria. Mr. Kelley had the tact to releve the President of any possible embarrassment, and resigned the mission, Soon afterwards he was appointed by Mr. Cleveland as the American member of the International Court of Appeals, then situated at Caire, Egypt, but in inter years transferred to Alexandria. For about sixteen years Judge Iteliey served his country and the world as a member of this high court, and for a part of the time as its chief justice, a position he resigned in 1992, owing to advancing age and declining health.

Prior to his career as a publicist and jurist. Mr. Kedley cullsted in a Petersburg company in the Confederate service, and early in the war was made prisoner and sent to Elmira, N. Y., a Federal military prison, along with many other Confederate soldlers, and was there incarcerated for some time. In after years he described his imprisonment and the prison conditions in a book published by him, called "In Vinculis," which had wide circulation. "The Falling Flag," another of Mr. Kelley's publications, described the retreat of the army from Petersburg to Appomattox. Mr. Kelley was thoroughly Confederate in his sympathy, and was an ardent admirer of Lee and Jackson, whose portraits he caused to be placed on the walls of his office while Mayor. Some years ago he delivered a characteristically chaste and thoughtful tribute to Jackson, entitled "The Modern Infantryman." In the early 90's Judge Kelley, while on a visit to this city, made an address at the Acudemy of Music descriptive of Egypt and the wonders of the land of the Fharaohs.

From the date of his residence in this city Mr. Kelley took an active interest in politics, and was a delegate to everycity, district, State and national convention for a number of years. Mis ability as an organizer and as a student of political conditions and affairs, as stated won him recognition from his party.

Judge Keiley's Family.

Judge Keiley (or Mr.; as he then was) married Miss Rebecca Davis, then of Petersburg, but who subsequently removed to Richmond and made his home here thereafter. Mrs. Kelley died two or three years ago. She was a sister of Mrs. E. J. Levy and Messrs. Mark and Goodman Davis, of this city, who survive here. The Judge is survived by his sister, Miss Ellen Kelley, of this city; his brothers. Bishop Benjamin Kelley, of Georgia, and Mr. William Kelley, of Georgia, and Mr. William Kelley, a member of the New York city bar. He leaves three children: Charles Russell Kelley, of Norfolk, head of the Department of Publicity of the Jamestown Exposition Company: George Kelley, an architect, of New York city, and a daughter, Marie, who married Capitaln Arthur Kay Hall, of the British army.

It was with his daughter, Mrs. Hall, that Judge Kelley resided the greater part of the time since his retirement from the bench. Capitaln Hall had been invalided recently, and they spent much of their time on the Isle of Jersey, off the English coast. While particulars of the fattal accident to Judge Kelley are wanting, it is believed here that he had just gone over to Paris to escape in that sunny land the rigors and discomfort of a British winter. During his London residence, Judge Kelley has met many Richmonders traveling abroad and has entorialized them, among them being Capitain W. Gordon McCabe, Mr. John M. Hisgins, Mr. and Mrs. Caskie Cabell and others.

Bright, Educated Woman Wanted to ake Remunerative and Pleasant Position—Musician Preferred."

The woman who answered this advertisement thirty years ago had no idea that by so doing she was to become the pioneer of an industry that was, within her own lifetime, to employ hundreds of her own lifetime, to employ hundreds of thousands of young women. She had not even an idea of the nature of work which thousands of young women. She had not thousands of young women. She had not even an idea of the nature of work which the 'remunerative and pleasant 'position' would require of her, for the typewriter was then anknown.

This voteran among women typists is Mrs. M. A. (Saunders, who is still employed in New York city by one of the great insurance companies. Left by the death of her husband without means of support for herself and her liftle daughter, she tried teaching music for a living, but was urged by friends to answer the advertisement as printed above. She wrote to the address given, and received next day a call from a representative of the Remington Typewriter, who left with her printed information about the machine and a request to call at the office. Supposing that the illustration, represented a new kind of sewing machine, she went to the address without much hope of finding congenial work.

She was introduced to the typewriting machine, and urged to try it. "Strike the little keys just like plano keys," was the only instruction she received. She found the experiment so fascinating that she kept on at it until an employe warned her that the office was about to close.

Her interest in the machine doubtless convinced those in charge that Mrs. Saunders would make a good operator, as after a few days of practice work she was given a position with the company. Ever since she has continued to earn her living through typewriting.

The thirtleth anniversary of Mrs. Saunders's work was celebrated by the gift of a beautiful gold watch from the Reminston Company, bearing the following inscription:

"1875-1905. To the ploneer typewriter.

"1875-1905. To the ploneer typewriter operator. From the ploneer manufacturer."
